This painting on canvas depicts a Native American woman's dress with figures walking along its perimeter.

A traditional Native American woman's dress symbolizes the "Earth Mother" who gives birth to everything. Her hands make a gesture of peace, and on the perimeter of the dress, human beings of identical size march around the planet. The questions posed in the title of the painting reference the need for a peaceful, respectful coexistence among peoples and emphasize the inappropriateness of one group oppressing another.
